

As a former broadcaster, and a longtime media-watcher, I find Sinclair Broadcasting's blatant partisanship and strong-arm tactics a perfect example of the corruption of the public trust that has resulted from misguided FCC decisions. The FCC has the obligation to advocate for the public, whose airwaves corporations like Sinclair use for free, with the understanding that they serve the needs of their viewers. A smear piece on a political candidate just weeks before an election is purely partisan, nothing more or less.
